■ This documentary film has been produced in cooperation with women who have survived domestic violence in Turkey. It includes interviews about their experiences of physical, psychological, sexual and economic violence as well as sexual abuse of children by the husband. They also talk about their strategies to stop the violence and to survive.

■ The film highlights the inadequacy of the current legislation but it is not only a report of women's experiences. It also serves as a tool for consciousness raising against domestic violence and shows women how to stop the dynamics of this violence. It can be used for training purposes in institutions.

■ Women for Women's Human Rights (WWHR) is an autonomous action-research project aiming to document and disseminate information on women's human rights in Turkey. Our group was founded in December 1993. We work in collaboration with the international network Women Living Under Muslim Laws (WLUML). WLUML is an international information, solidarity and support network of women affected by Muslim laws, whether these are written in civil codes and/or religious texts or are unwritten and customary.

■ Our organization aims to end discrimination against women through empowerment programs linked to action-research, particularly to provide women and women's organizations at the grass-roots level with tools and strategies to confront structures of inequality and the effects of marginalization. This is accomplished by carrying out research, disseminating the gathered information in various forms appropriate for women of different literary levels and by utilizing research results to help enact policy, legal, and social changes.

■ We also recognize the importance and necessity of women's international solidarity and support. Within this context we support women's struggles for their rights in other parts of the world and cooperate with international networks such as WLUML.

■ In response to the positive feedback to its activities so far, WWHR is seeking to become an established NGO in Turkey: a place where women from all walks of life can come in order to turn their ideas into initiatives by and for women.
